WOODLAND WILDFLOWER WALK

A woodland wildflower and birding walk will be held on Saturday, May 1, from 10:00 – 11:00 A.M. at Ashton Wildwood Park.

Katie Cantu, Naturalist with the Jasper County Conservation Board, will lead the walk that is open to the public. Local amateur photographer Howard Vrankin will share some of his outdoor photography tips.

Ashton Wildwood Park is located 7 miles west of Baxter on Highway F-17, and 1/4 mile south on West 122nd St. North. The walk will begin at the second picnic shelter near the start of the nature trail. Participants are welcome to bring binoculars and cameras if they wish.

The walk will be canceled in the event of rain.

Conservation Greeting Cards Available

Jasper Conservation Connection (JCC) hosted their second annual photo contest this year, with the top placing photos used on greeting cards. The photographs had to be taken by amateur photographers in Jasper County, featuring wildlife, landscapes, or people enjoying the outdoors.

Eight photos were selected for the cards, two from each season of the year. The photographers are Linda Hotger, Sandy Clark, Linda Greene, Teresa Arrowood, James Powell, Barbara Van Zante, and Danna Fruetel. They will each receive 16 free cards. To view the photographs, go to www.jaspercountyconservation.com.

The cards will be sold in packages of sixteen at $15.00 a package. They are available for purchase at the Jasper County Conservation Board office, 115 N. 2nd Ave. E. in Newton. The cards are blank inside, so they are perfect for use throughout the year, and make a great gift! In addition, if you purchase 3 sets of cards, you will receive a free JCC canvas shopping bag.

Thanks to everyone who participated in this year's contest, and keep those cameras ready throughout the coming year!

Straight Talk About Debt

Anytime somebody talks about having a "strategy" to get out of debt, it pays to be leery. There are scams galore, including those that promise (for a fee) to take your payments and make arrangements with lenders to accept a smaller amount each month. (Unless you send the check yourself, you really don't know where it's going.)

However, there's a new book out that talks about strategy, and it's one you can trust: "Debt-Free Forever (Take Control of Your Money and Your Life)" by Gail Vaz-Oxlade (Collins, $14.95).

There's a lot of no-nonsense tough love in Vaz-Oxlade's plans, and there should be if a strategy to reduce debt is going to succeed. After all, the average consumer has $16,000 in credit-card debt. But under the humor (yes, there's that, too) is a sound plan. She tells you upfront that it's going to be hard work, right in the first line of Chapter One, then moves quickly into the all-important first step: Find out where your money's going (spreadsheets are provided in the book). Step two, facing your debt, is where Vaz-Oxlade takes things beyond the typical "get out of debt" book. Not only are debts written down and categorized, they're critiqued and analyzed for what they really cost.

There is plenty of hands-on help. Focus on long-term goals. Decide what you really want, because with debt control, it matters. Write down your core values, prioritize and set a goal. Find friends who are compatible with that goal (spending less to have fun). Swap bad habits for good ones. "Debt-Free Forever" explains how to get a handle on disappearing money (what happens when the pocket monster eats all the change when you break a $20), 401(k) plans, insurance, credit cards and more. There are worksheets, guidelines, instructions on how to make a budget -- everything you need to become debt free, except for a pencil, piece of paper and a calculator.

Vaz-Oxlade has a television show called "Til Debt Do Us Part" (about couples in debt) on CNBC and has written 11 books on finances. As she says on her blog: "Money is only a tool. You can use it to your advantage or you can misuse it to your detriment. You decide."

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH By Paul G. Donohue, M.D.

Low Sodium Level Causes Many Symptoms

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: What can you tell me about a low sodium level? My visiting friend (from England) was refused embarkation on his cruise because he was acting belligerent and confused. The ship's doctor sent him to a hospital. He had scans, an EEG and numerous blood and urine tests. Everything was normal except he had low sodium. His insurance carrier sent a doctor from England to accompany him on a flight back to London. He has since seen his own doctor. His sodium level has risen. What happened to him? -- B.L.

ANSWER: Sodium has many functions. It keeps body fluids at the right level. It maintains blood pressure. It's essential for muscle contractions. It participates in generating the heartbeat. It carries a positive electric charge, so it balances the negatively charged body substances. A drop in blood sodium leads to fatigue, nausea and weakness. If the level dips farther, people become confused and dizzy. At very low levels, they could have a seizure and lapse into a coma.

Your friend's doctor has the task of finding out why your friend's sodium level fell. In quite a few instances, it comes about from an inappropriate release of a body hormone called ADH, antidiuretic hormone. This hormone stops kidney urine production. The result is too much water in the body. The extra water dilutes sodium and produces a low reading. Liver diseases, troubles with the adrenal glands and a sluggish thyroid gland are other causes for a lowering of blood sodium.

Restoring the body's sodium content is not too difficult. Tracking the reason why it dropped is.

Has your friend's mental function normalized now that his sodium level has returned to normal? If it has not, then his doctor has to look for explanations of his erratic behavior that have nothing to do with his sodium. ***

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have been eating ice cream and cookies sweetened with Splenda for about four years, enjoying them very much and not experiencing any bad side effects. Then someone told me that Splenda is really bug poison and that it has made a lot of people sick, so I stopped using it. I have noticed no improvement, but I didn't have anything wrong in the first place. I miss Splenda foods. What is your opinion? -- N.B.

ANSWER: Splenda is not bug poison. It's made from sugar. It's a product that is 600 times sweeter than sugar. It is not absorbed, so it contributes no calories to those who eat it. It's FDA-approved, and I trust the people at the Food and Drug Administration more than I trust your informant. There's no reason for you not to use it. Some people delight in passing on alarming information. Your "someone" has to be one of them.***

THIS IS A HAMMER By Samantha Mazzotta

Heavy Rains Take Toll on Basements

Q: I have a dry basement. But recently, after heavy rains, I noticed that in two corners of the basement the paint was bubbling up a bit and, when I pressed one of the bubbles, the paint split and water trickled out. I haven't experienced dampness issues before. What's the problem? -- Gary in Waltham, Mass.

A: Considering all the pump hoses I saw trailing from basements around my neighborhood following recent heavy rains in the Northeast, a little dampness doesn't seem like much. But you're paying attention to the problem right away, when it's relatively small and new -- and that's actually very important. It can save you from having to bale out the basement a few years from now.

The first thing to do is to find out if water is draining correctly away from your foundation, or if something is impeding that drainage. Check outside the house, near those corners. Are there gutter downspouts nearby? Do you have shrubs, hedges or other plants in place next to the foundation?

If gutter downspouts are near the corners, make sure the water is draining well away from the foundation and that it disperses evenly. The small bend at the bottom of the downspout may not be enough -- water should be directed at least a foot away from the foundation, so you might need to purchase a gutter extension.

Should the rains return before you're able to do that, you could do what my neighbor did in a pinch during the storms, and improvise a drain extension. What he did was set a flat piece of concrete directly beneath the downspout opening, raised the end slightly by placing a few pebbles underneath so the water flowed away faster. He then found a length of flexible plastic tubing about 4 feet long in his shed and duct-taped that to the end of the downspout.

Check the distance of plants from the house. They should be planted more than a foot away from the foundation to prevent their roots from extending to the foundation and allowing water to seep in through the cracks they exploit. Plants that are set too near, or plants whose roots have crept to the foundation, should be removed and new plants placed farther away.

If you don't see improvement in the water seepage, or would just like to make sure, have a licensed contractor double-check the basement and foundation for unseen damage. The faster you tackle any issues, the less you'll have to shell out for repairs down the road.

HOME TIP: Inspect your home's gutter system twice a year, in spring and fall, for debris clogs and damage to the gutters.
