STUDIO D HISTORY

A WWII bunker in Essen, Germany big enough to shelter 500 people - the last place you'd expect to find a vintage mixing console...

... not even easy to find the front door...

... not exactly luxury accommodation,
but we braved the cold, the dark and the damp...

... sign says "this way to studio" -- looks like we`re in the right place after all...

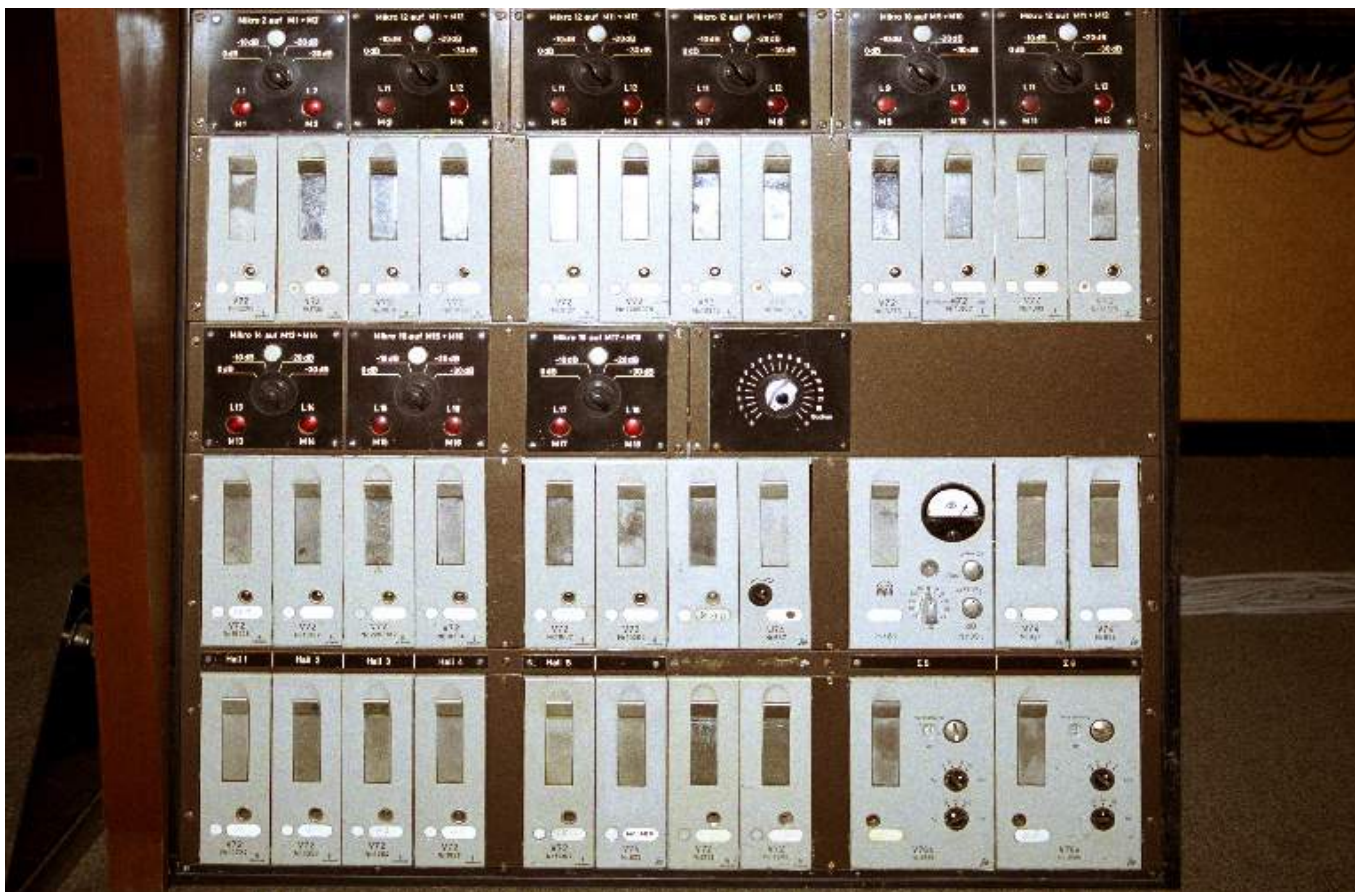

... but it looks like someone`s got here before us...

... luckily, the control cabin was in OK shape, and the desk is immaculate. 1959 Telefunken / Siemens with more than 180 vacuum tubes... and everything works! Here`s ICP`s John Hastry with Helmut Geldmacher, previous owner.

EQ's are all tube, and faders are not carbon but wired resistor. A clip system on the faders provides mono to stereo functionality.

Mic pre amps are V72's, and there's a couple of tube compressors and even a tube oscillator for calibration.

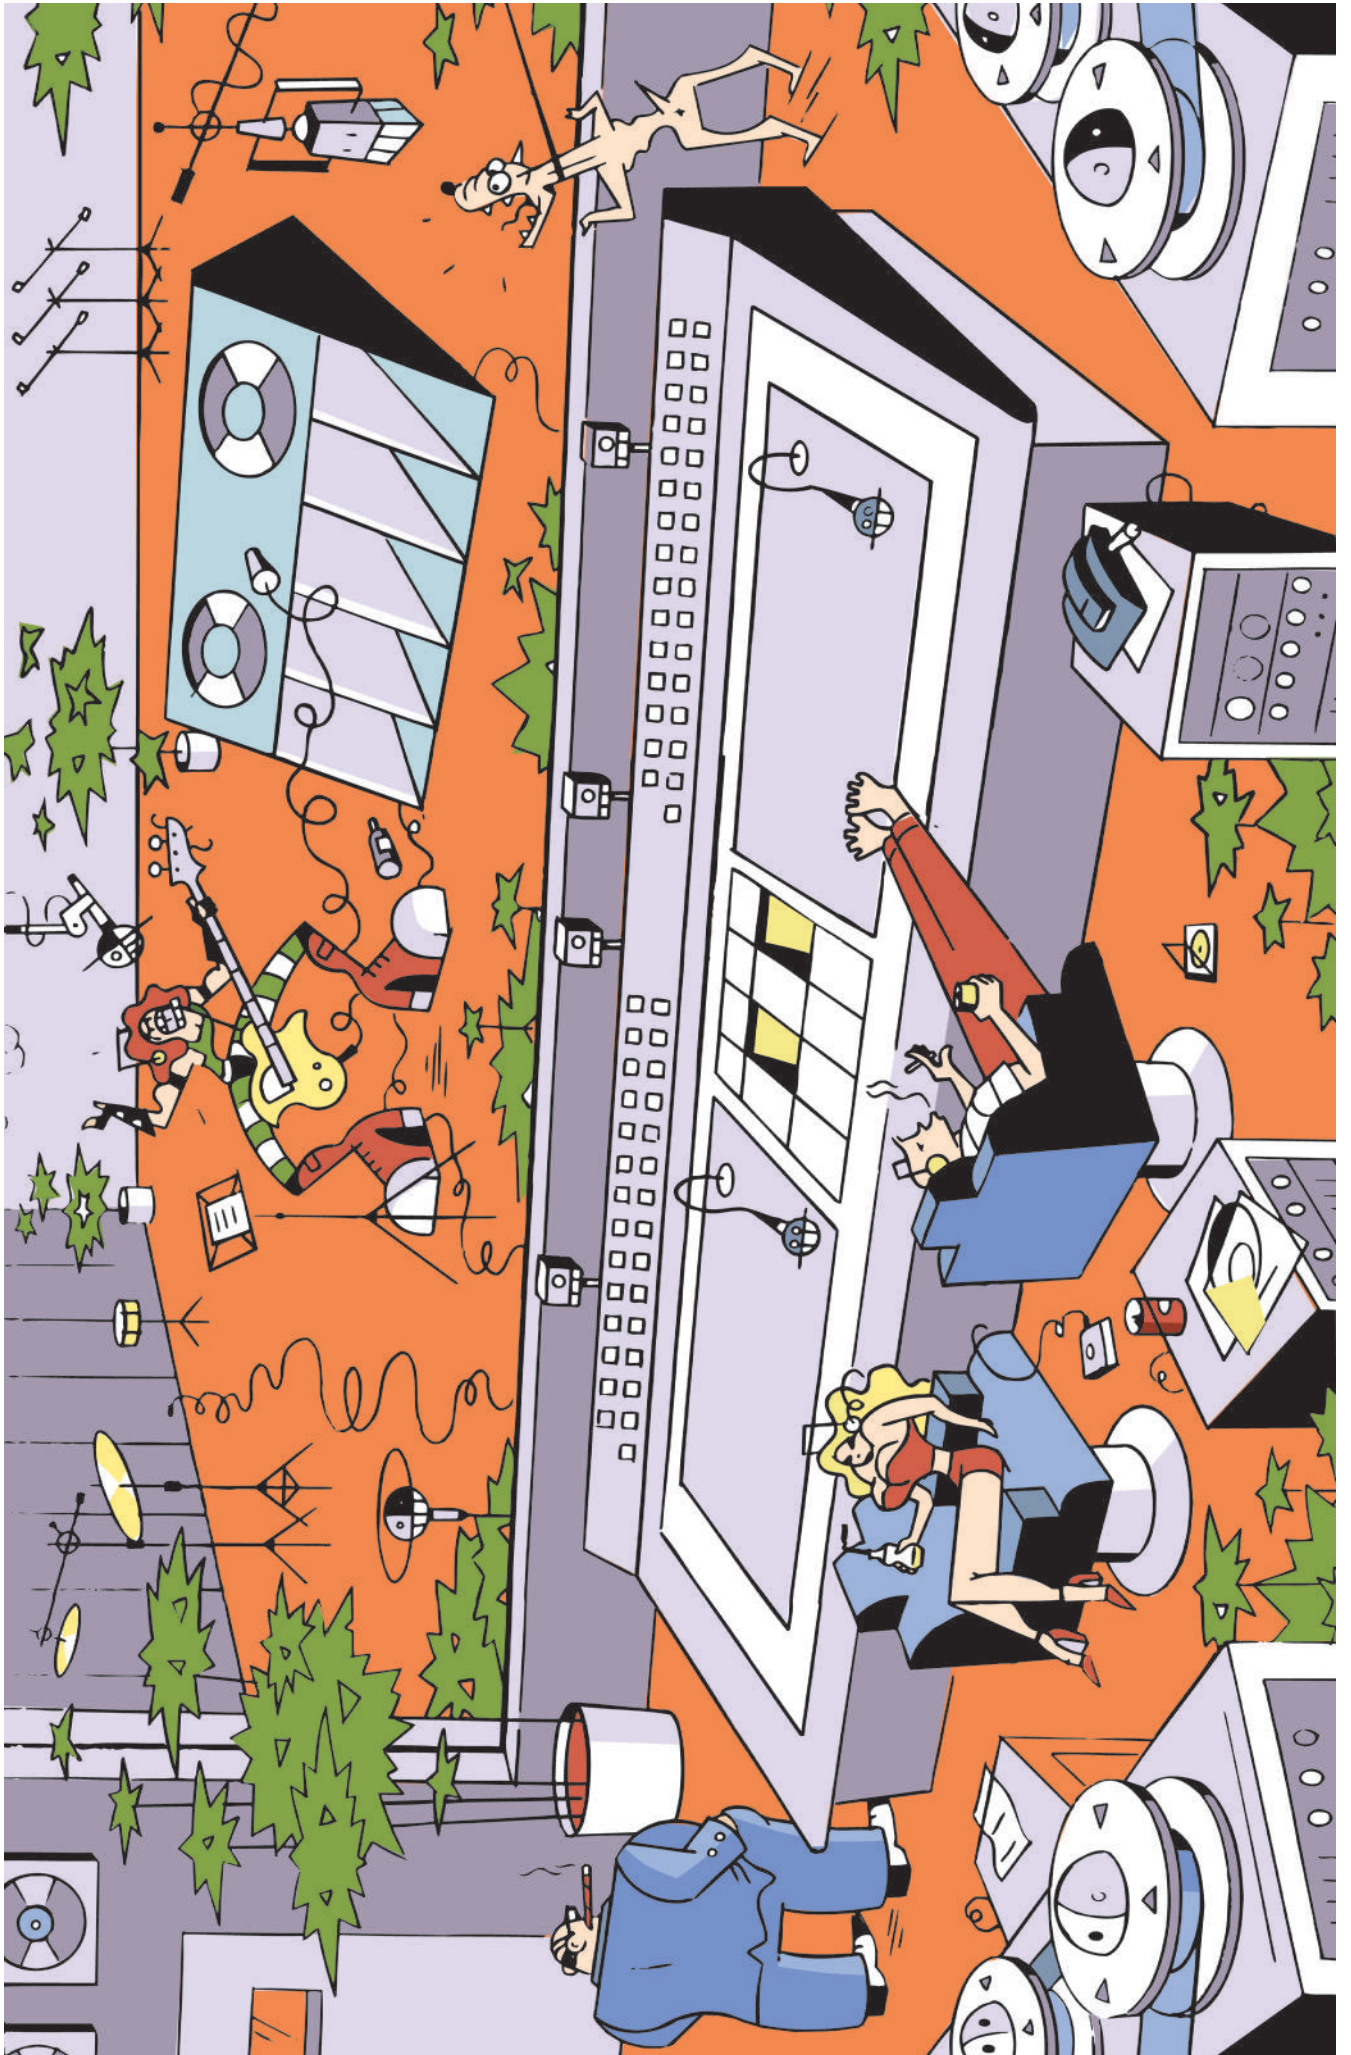

The four output amps are V76`s and the 18 EQ`s are powered by more V72`s.

Here`s the last shot, minutes before we snipped all the wires and heaved the desk into the ICP truck... it`s now safe in it`s new home up in studio D (see “pictures”), and it sounds as wonderful as it looks.

INTRODUCTION BY SOLOMON BURKE

Solomon Burke

If the initials I.C.P. don't mean much to you now, I hope that before I am through, it will be worth a treasure to you. My name is Solomon Burke. I have been recording since 1954, when "direct to disc" was "direct to disc." Throughout my six decades of music, I have been in some of the best, the less, and the rest of the studios around the world. The high-class, the big-class and the class... but this is the first time that a studio has taken me to school. This should give you a clue that you have entered the recording kingdom of sound and soul!

First, the element of surprise – the entrance to a driveway on a little street that opens up to a gateway that goes down a cobblestone road, to the main entrance. Beyond the front doors is a wealth of everything and anything that a performer or artist may need to release his or her soul. The facilities become a private castle with more studios to bear and a wealth of every type of instrument to share, microphones and speakers beyond compare. And let's not forget the hospitality! The owner and his colleagues all become family instantly, from your first track to your last, and that is only the beginning. The presences of great spirits surround you with the display of all of the projects that have been recorded at I.C.P., the commitment to comfort and creativity and the fundamental kindness and happiness in the bricks of the walls. The essence of home cooked food will capture your imagination and inspire your taste buds for creation, creation, creation, from lyrics to music, to the greatest hamburgers in the world. I think I'm getting a little hasty, but I forgot to tell you about the pastry. Yes!

You will find yourself booking the studio again and again, my friend, again and if you can't get in, that means I've booked the whole studio again! There are no misses here, all hits! So pack up your thoughts and enter into the world of I.C.P. Residential Recording Studios (Real Relaxing Situation)... long may you rein. Seven stars and seven diamonds!
