Getting started with your Grid4

{Device schematics}

The Grid launcher

To launch applications in Grid4, use the Grid launcher. Also known as the home screen, the launcher allows you to browse, organize and manage your applications. To help you understand where you are in the Grid launcher, you will notice there is a miniature Grid map to keep you situated. You can create groups of applications, called clusters, and you can customize your launcher background by pressing the configuration button under the Grid map. In Edit mode, you can also move applications between clusters and even move the clusters themselves.

Status bar and TaoBar

The status bar, located at the top of most Grid4 screens, shows indicators and widget controls for wireless networks, notifications, music playback and volume control.

The TaoBar is a unique feature in the Grid4 that shows details on your current notifications, events and ongoing sensor information. It also offers suggestions that might be of interest for example while listening to music it suggests music from similar artists. At lunchtime, it suggests nearby places to eat.

Configure your device

The Settings application can be found on the Grid launcher. You can examine and configure options about various aspects of the system such as wireless network access, date and time, display brightness and privacy settings. You can also link your Grid4 to popular Web Social Media sites in the external accounts configuration page.

Surf the web

The Grid Browser is presents the Web in a powerful and new way. The browser controls are not normally visible, but tapping anywhere on the screen reveals the address bar, the tabs dial and the control cluster. The address bar lets you enter the website or search term you are looking for, while the tabs dial lets you switch and manage open browser tabs. The control cluster contains bookmarks and history viewers, along with other supporting features you would expect from any browser. The controls automatically hide again after use.

When browsing a web page, you can select text by pressing and holding on the desired text. The text selection markers appear and let you adjust the selection with ease. Once selected, tap on the text to get the QuickNav with options for the selection. The Search option provides context-sensitive links and search information about the selected text.

Import your data from the cloud

To make it easier to start using the Grid4, you can configure it to import data from online services. There is support for Google and Yahoo!, including the e-mail, contacts and calendar services they provide. You can also enter your Facebook, Twitter and Flickr accounts, for greater integration of all your messages, contacts and photos. You can also configure e-mail services from other providers using POP or IMAP. The Grid4 also automatically links to a free online address book and calendar.

Work with contacts

The Contacts application will list your contacts from all the different sources you have configured. Enjoy the default grid view of the contacts, showing off your friends pictures that were imported from Google or Facebook. When you want more detailed information on a particular contact, just tap on the contact to see the full card, along with a stream of social media messages and updates between you.

Send and receive messages

The Grid Message Center integrates your e-mail, Facebook and Twitter accounts. If you have a SIM card on your device, the Message Center also sends and receives SMS and MMS messages. You can see all your messages aggregated in a single, universal inbox or by specific account. You will also enjoy the message grid view, where the Grid4 learns what are the most important messages and contacts and lays them out with more relevance.

Enjoy your music, videos and photos

The Grid4 is a fantastic place for you to enjoy your videos, photos and music. You can load media on your device using the GridDesktop application on your PC or Mac or by copying it to a compatible SD Card and inserting it in the device. The content is automatically presented in the applications in the Media cluster of the Launcher. In the Music app, you can browse, listen and organize your songs into playlists.

In the Videos app, you can browse, watch and organize your video content into playlists. If you configured a Facebook or a Twitter account, both Music and Video apps let you share your thoughts on the song or video you are watching with your friends. The Photos app lets you can browse, view and organize your photo library into events and albums. If you configured a Flickr or Facebook account, Photos will also let you view your photos stored online, as well as upload new photos.

Keep your device updated

The Grid4 automatically notifies you when software updates are available. If you want to manually check for updates, just open the Settings application and go to About Grid4>System Updates. If and when an update is found, make sure you connect the device to a power source and follow the instructions on the screen.
