Steve Halasey | Chief Editor

✉ shalasey@allied360.com

Steve Halasey became chief editor of Clinical Lab Products in November 2013, bringing to the publication more than two decades of experience in health technology journalism and policy communications, both in print and online. He is well regarded in an international network of contacts that includes business and policy thought leaders, academic and clinical researchers, members of the technology development community, and healthcare professionals in a variety of settings. Before joining CLP, he served as vice president for programs for a leading medtech research and education foundation based in Washington, DC. He was previously editor of several well-known trade and business publications serving the medical device and diagnostics industry.

Now in its 46th year of publication, CLP is the preeminent product and technology publication for the clinical laboratory community. But in the shifting climate of today's healthcare environments, representing advanced technologies means doing more than just covering the launch of new products and feature sets. Laboratory buyers also need to understand how new products and services can be integrated with their current offerings, what policies and practices will govern the use of those products, the value of new offerings for their current and future business, and how the products can improve patient outcomes.

In 2016, watch for more of this coverage from CLP, as the publication expands its multimedia reach to provide broader and deeper context about the issues and perspectives that are important to clinical laboratory professionals. With strong participation from sector thought leaders and greater audience engagement, CLP looks to convey more product information in a more meaningful way. In both print and online media, CLP's compelling editorial package creates an outstanding backdrop for suppliers, providing advertising and sponsored content opportunities that can improve companies' lead-nurturing capabilities.

Current members of CLP's editorial advisory board represent a select group of subject matter experts with decades of experience and outstanding professional networks:

Ronald A. Blum, PhD

Senior Vice President, Marketing and Strategic Business Development, Pathology Inc.

William DeSalvo, BS HTL(ASCP)

AP System Production Manager, Sonora Quest Laboratories
