You can now "chat" with your cellphone.

7.6.1 Log in

You may let your Messenger service start up automatically when you switch on the phone. You may also choose to login the service automatically with the user data you stored in the phone.

⁽¹⁾ Depending on version, this feature may not be available.

7.6.2 Presence

IM enables a user to see the connection status or presence of other users.

The presence includes a combination of network status information (online or offline) and user specified status information (available or busy).

An important privacy protection feature of Messenger is the ability to block another user at any time. Blocked users cannot see your presence neither send you unsolicited IM (SPIM: the word for IM spam).

In one glance you can know the presence of your friends thanks to the IM buddy list: it is the list of contacts with whom you may chat. You can manage your IM buddy list: add a new contact (using a cellphone number or the messenger ID), or search for a contact.

You can also create groups of contacts in order to well manage your contact list.

7.6.3 Always on

Cellphone IM works the same way as on a PC: you can still receive IM messages, even if the IM application is not on the screen. An IM icon in the status bar shows you whether IM is on or off. The icon shows:

- if you are online and available,
- if you are online and busy,
- if there are unread IM

No icon means that you are not connected.

- in the status bar, the IM icon is updated,
- a line with the number of conversations with different friends (whatever the number of IMs) or information messages appears on the idle screen. Select this line and press OK to access it from the main screen.

You can also create a private chatroom and invite your online contacts to chat together.
