Your business' ability to grow depends largely on your employees' ability to do their jobs well. Keeping teams productive and on task takes collaboration. Following are three things you can do to help improve collaboration and give your business a boost.

Collaborate without boundaries.

Gone are the days when team collaboration took place around a conference room table. Today, employees need to go wherever the job takes them and still be able to work together—even when they're apart. By migrating your critical business applications to the cloud and providing a secure network where employees can access what they need when they need it, you'll create an environment for collaboration that is as flexible and agile as your workforce.

Customize your collaborative experience.

You can't find a solution without knowing the problem. If you want to improve how your teams work together, you first need to understand the obstacles they face. For example, is unreliable connectivity slowing them down? Once you know the issue, you'll be able to empower your mobile workforce with the right tools for more powerful and effective collaboration.

Strengthen your communications infrastructure.

Sometimes, a simple conversation is all it takes to solve a complex challenge. But when you have employees both in the office and in the field, you need a unified communications system that works seamlessly between different types of phones.

With One Talk<sup>SM</sup> from Verizon, you get a mobile-first phone system that works on desktop phones as well as select Android® and iOS mobile devices. With One Talk's 6-way Conference Calling, your employees can collaborate on the fly. And One Talk's video conferencing lets them meet face-to-face even when they're in different cities, states or countries. One Talk provides 50 business-grade phone features, so your employees can more easily connect.
