Using Technology to Increase Access to Dermatology

The practice of dermatology continues to confront multiple forces that threaten to derail our mission to serve. As we have for over 100 years, we should own and take the lead in this transformation. Three key strategies to ensure we do so will be presented, including the creative use of technology, the power of full engagement, and the obligation to lead.

John E. Harris, MD, PhD, FAAD

Marion B. Sulzberger, MD, Memorial Award and Lectureship

Vitiligo Treatment from the Iron Age to the Age of Biologics: New hope for an Ancient Disease

Vitiligo was described 3,500 years ago in ancient Egyptian and Indian texts, and the social stigma associated with this disfiguring disease was evident from the very beginning. Forms of PUVA therapy were initiated during the Iron Age and rediscovered in the mid-20th century, yet within just the past 100 years patients were treated with either acid or arsenic. While these treatments have been replaced in modern times by safer options such as nbUVB and topical immunosuppressants, the search for even more effective, targeted therapies has continued. Research discoveries have inspired pathogenesis-directed treatments, such as Janus Kinase inhibitors, which have been effective in the first large clinical trials conducted for vitiligo. However, disease relapse is frequent when treatments are discontinued. New research shows promise for the development of better, longer-lasting treatments, and biologics to treat vitiligo are on the horizon. This Sulzberger Memorial Lecture will discuss the millennia-long search for better vitiligo treatments, including recent data that provides new hope for this ancient disease.

Suzanne L. Topalian, MD

Lila and Murray Gruber Memorial Cancer Research Award and Lectureship

Immune Checkpoint Blockade: Changing the Outlook for Patients with Melanoma and Other Skin Cancers

Just one decade ago, patients with advanced skin cancers including melanoma had very limited treatment options to extend survival. The recent development of a class of drugs known as "immune checkpoint blockers," enabling the patient's own immune system to attack their cancer, has revolutionized treatment approaches in oncology. Building on this, new strategies are testing treatment combinations based on checkpoint inhibitors and suggest a role for these therapies in earlier stages of high-risk skin cancers.
